"The feedback that we received about the intensity of movements, tackles and defending was used as a baseline when we created the new player model," said Nicolas Doucet, FIFA Lead Technical Director. "I think the fans will enjoy seeing it all come to life on the pitch." Motion Capture Technology Through the EA SPORTS Football Club, FIFA players have access to real-life player data, allowing the FIFA development team to create updated player models and capture gameplay. Players can upload matches from any competition and share data in the format of their choosing. Updated Player Models The updated player models in FIFA 22 are comprised of athlete-specific data from the motion capture sessions. In addition to feet, elbows, knees and head movement, the team is now able to capture and use realistic depth data for players in motion. For example, when a player receives a pass in FIFA 22, the depth at which the ball touches the player is more accurate than ever. "The FIFA development team has been working on FIFA 22 for four years, so it's definitely been a big project for us," said Greg Thomas, Head of FIFA and Madden on EA SPORTS. "The authenticity and depth of these players, particularly on the ball, is an important milestone for our fans, and it's something you won't see on console until you're playing on the new platforms." "A number of our updates focus on improving gameplay and gameplay authenticity. The new player models look and feel great, as did the improvements made to the ball," said Doucet. "We're also excited about the depth on the ball we can capture now, as well as the new, more authentic ball physics." Improved Visuals For FIFA 22, the team has partnered with DICE's Frostbite game engine, upgrading the game's visuals to run at a higher resolution and experience less pop-in than FIFA 15. The Frostbite engine is also used to drive the lighting and environmental effects. This year, FIFA 22 upgrades the lighting package to use a new shaders with physical lighting, more dynamic shadows and blur effects to simulate the movement of the environment. On the pitch, the EA SPORTS Football Club team also started early with the new clubs in FIFA 22 by upgrading
