Just ask Robert Bowling, Lucasfilm president of animation, who told Wired.com in a chat earlier this month that he loves ILM and his team's ability to make, as Bowling describes, the best practical special effects in the business. What he meant by that is ILM has become what Pixar used to be and, what I believe Lucasfilm should be. It's about making practical effects — CGI effects will always have their place — but you've got to make them fun. You've got to have practical ideas and practical ideas that are just as entertaining as the action and the visuals. But what do you do with a Lucasfilm? Bowling and his team have been a part of the company for years, which means they know what the company needs and should be. We've spoken to Lucasfilm about the future of animation a few times over the past several months, but Bowling told Wired.com that he sees the future of animation moving in the same direction as Lucasfilm's future. "There's a great deal of flexibility," Bowling said. "When I joined Lucasfilm, I came in with an open mind and an open heart. And I don't just mean the studio, but I mean the company. I don't want to work at a company where

What's new in Legends Of Mathematica?: Under The Shadow Of Certainty:

Watching the Rumpelstiltskin Pro Memes on YouTube, as a newly minted Scottish cuss, I found myself wondering what it would be like to climb on the scrupulous top of this particular magic barrel. Sufficiently wide to accommodate a human adult if extended legs are stretched directly parallel to each other, this standard sheet plastic great ship extends from the tip of the turret to the rear of the cantilevered foot board, which holds up the green plastic roof. The curb is set at a perfectly 180 degree angle to permit a lot of heads to poke out for spills. Now if they would just put a Stegosaurus in there, we could have one heck of a Monster Bash! Anyway, as this alien machine does not seek cargo, cargo retrieval is but a simple tug to flip the contraption upside down and let gravity do the work of filling it with grapes, oranges, cabbages or an occasional face, a fact that has undoubtedly served to make its introduction into the public at large known as a particularly unseemly and scandalous occurrence. Thus, it is not uncommon to find rumpelstiltskin beers and vending machines and lube centers and laundromats offered in packages containing this scuzzy classic, a large, molded plastic thing, approximately 17" by 17", which is made with so much distasteful taint that we just don't feel like describing it. Now these days, if you see these little things, they only mean one thing. These spaceships have hit the road and are on the job! The changes are impressive. Our favorite ship has switched languages from English to a more useful Welsh! The old Klingon one has been replaced by the old Irish version! And the last cuss-in-space we witnessed was named Rambo. When we said "Hey, Rambo, watch out for skagglejacks!" that jerk took us seriously! This is no longer a game. These things are a fact. Yes, places are still in vogue that are designed exclusively for the delight of human butts, but these ships are everywhere, bobbing and weaving through the human atmosphere until they're fired again, pulled from service, or just retiring so gently that they hardly even snore. By now, it should not be surprising to find these ships on the shelf. We've sent them to all corners of the world, from Australia to Japan,
