In the case of stretch-blow-moulding of thermoplastic materials, the products are produced in the stretch-blow-moulding machine in the stretched state. For this purpose, the wall thicknesses of the mould cavity of the blow-mould is adapted such that, in particular, the blowing pressure prevails during filling, a phenomenon which is referred to as a stretching of the material. The stretching is carried out in the shape of a kink and is necessary for the manufacturing of stretch set products. This stretching is made possible by the use of a twin screw extruder and an injection nozzle which are equipped with different screw geometries in the shaping zone. The stretching of the material can take place in the shaping zone, but it is also possible to subject the material to stretching in a separate stretching zone. The use of the previous process steps in the case of stretch-blow-moulding of polyester melt-moulded products is very complex and is scarcely possible with the designs which are known from the prior art.

However, using the process according to the invention, it is possible to stretch the polyester melt-moulded products in a horizontal stretch-blow-moulding machine, in which the material is introduced into the forming tools in the shape of a thermoplastic melt and after compression into the mould cavity is stretched by means of a fluid flow. The use of the known horizontal stretch-blow-moulding machines is already known; reference is made, for example, to GB-PS No. 1560997, WO 93/16922 and EP 674288 A1. In the horizontal stretch-blow-moulding machines known hitherto, it is in principle possible to work with single screw extruders which are provided with an injection nozzle and with the two forming tools. A twin screw extruder is known as such from DE 195 10 845 C2. In the case of this invention, the use of a twin screw extruder is made possible by

Pack VSTi, Presets,.I've got a lot of good news for you today, guys, and I think you're going to really enjoy it.
Also, if you have an iPhone 8 or iPhone 8 Plus, we've got some news for you too, but not as much good.
Apple's WWDC 2016 Keynote is here, and it's starting off with an apology, which is pretty sweet to hear.
Apple has now confirmed what we were pretty sure they were going to say: this year's WWDC in San Francisco will be live streamed, and attendees will be able to follow the event through Apple's product events page as well as social media. While we already knew that Apple's WWDC would not be held at their usual, historic, and traditional location in Cupertino, California, we didn't realize just how much their changes would come down to. Even though the Cupertino campus isn't exactly in disrepair, it is located very close to the traffic and has a single theme, so Apple is out to change it. The new venue will offer a lineup of keynote stages that will allow them to deliver a much more intimate keynote experience. The campus is also more complex, which creates a more amenable environment for the live streaming of the event, and it will accommodate the about 200,000 attendees Apple typically expects to show up for WWDC. The evening keynote will now take place at the Bill Graham Civic Auditorium, and will be streaming live here on Apple.com, on the Apple Events page, and on your
